PROPRIETARY SCHOOLS OVERVIEW

Proprietary schools are for-profit businesses, which provide education and training. They may be privately owned, a partnership or a corporation. Under Article 8 of the North Carolina General Statutes 115D, the State Board of Community Colleges is charged with the responsibility of licensing certain proprietary business, trade and correspondence schools in North Carolina. This responsibility was transferred from the State Board of Education by action of the General Assembly in 1987.

The licensing process may take from four to six months because of the reviews required. To be licensed, proprietary schools must pay an initial licensing fee of $2,500 or a renewal fee of $1,250 plus $50 per program each year thereafter, and must meet the general requirements for licensing standards for program and course offerings, facilities, financial stability, personnel, and operating practices.

The State Board of Community Colleges, along with seven other boards or agencies, is charged with regulating the proprietary school industry in North Carolina. Others include:
